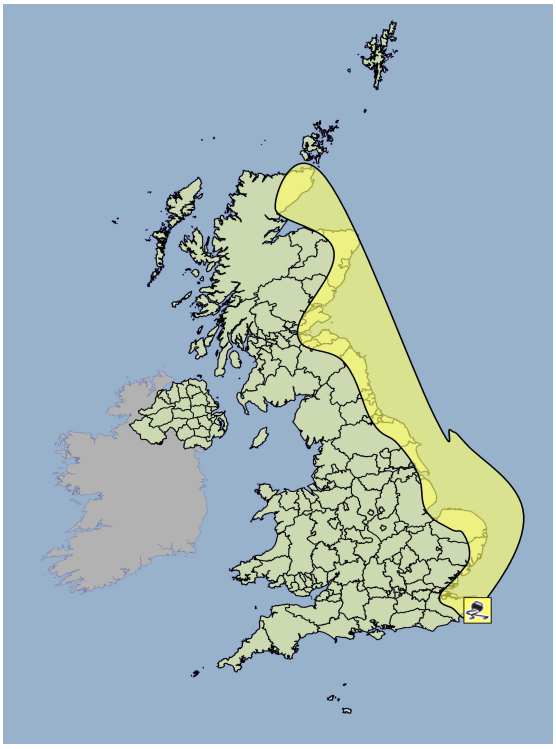
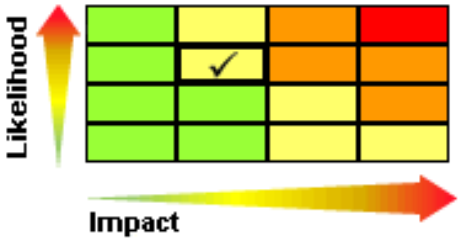
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Wintry showers have faded at present, but there are indications that they will develop again in some areas later today and tonight. There are some uncertainties attached to the extent of showers, and thus ice, within the warning area.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 22:00 on Thu, 28th Mar 2013 until 09:00 on Fri, 29th Mar 2013

Wintry showers are expected to develop in some eastern areas later on Thursday, persisting in places overnight. Where they do occur, they will increase the risk of icy stretches on untreated surfaces, and additionally could leave a cm or so of snowfall, just here and there.

The public should be aware of the risk of local tricky travel conditions, although such problems should be relatively few and far between.
